

Dear Mom & Dad....I died today

It is almost unimaginable for us as parents to think about or even to imagine that their son or daughter their precious baby will be killed, much less to sit down and write a letter to our lost child. But that is exactly what parents across the county have been asked to do. As part of the project Dear Mom and Dad I died today, high school students were asked to pretend that they had the opportunity to write a final parting letter to their parents prior to being killed in a drunk driving wreck that day. Parents were also asked to do the same writing a letter to their child. This was not an easy letter for either parent or child to write, but we asked them to do this in the hope that going through this process would encourage greater parental involvement in the lives of their children, increase and expand the communication opportunities in these families, and, over the long term, to decrease the reckless drunk driving incidents involving our teenagers. Many of the letters that are in this book came from high schools that have used the Dear Mom and Dad program. A sample letter that was sent to high school counselors, principles and teachers is as follows:
