However, Kundalini as a spiritual experience is thought to have parallels in many of the mystical and gnostic traditions of the worlds great religions. Many factors point to the universality of the phenomenon. The early Christians might have referred to the concept as pneuma, and there are some recent parallels in contemporary Christian Charismatic Holy Ghost phenomena. Religious studies also note parallels in Quakerism, Shakerism, Judaic Shuckling (torso-rocking prayer), the swaying zikr and whirling dervish of Islam, the quiverings of the Eastern Orthodox hesychast, the flowing movements of tai chi, the ecstatic shamanic dance, the ntum trance dance of the Bushman, Tibetan Buddhist tummo heat as practised by Milarepa, and the Indically-derived Andalusian flamenco (Sovatsky, 1998). Kundalini practice is centerfold in Japans Aum Shinrikyo group and Kundalini-yoga is also one of the stages the practitioner is able to achieve.
