Leo Tolstoy The Two Brothers and the Gold

The Two Brothers and the Gold is a book by Leo Tolstoy. It belongs to his works dedicated to the subject of religion. This book includes original illustrations of the story. Here are some passages from this book: And the Angel said to him: That same Devil who placed the gold there in order to corrupt thee, hath also put these big words into thy mouth. And then the conscience of Athanasius upbraided him, and he understood that what he had done was not done for God, and he wept and began to repent. Then the Angel stepped aside from the road, and left free for him the path in which John was already standing awaiting his brother. And from thenceforth Athanasius yielded no more to the wiles of the Devil who had strewn the gold in his path, and he understood that not by gold, but by good works only, could he render service to God and his fellow-man.
