

A Spoil of Office: A Story of the Modern West

Early in the cool hush of a June morning in the seventies, a curious vehicle left Farmer Councils door, loaded with a merry group of young people. It was a huge omnibus, constructed out of a heavy farm wagon and a hay rack, and was drawn by six horses. The driver was Councils hired man, Bradley Talcott. Council himself held between his vast knees the staff of a mighty flag in which they all took immense pride. The girls of the grange had made it for the day.
